County to Launch PSA Campaign for COVID-19 Testing Sites for Residents

In light of Perplexing CDC Announcement, County Executive Bellone Reiterates the Importance of Testing and Encourages Residents to Go Get Tested

As testing continues to be a vital tool in combatting the COVID-19 pandemic, Suffolk County Executive Steve Bellone today announced nearly 100 locations across the County are offering COVID-19 diagnostic testing, antibody testing, and rapid testing. The County will launch a comprehensive Public Service Awareness Campaign to provide residents with updated information on testing locations, including sites that are free of charge.

Earlier this week, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention released updated guidance declaring that individuals do not necessarily need to get tested for COVID-19 after coming in contact with someone who has tested positive. This new guidance contradicts earlier guidelines and is inconsistent with what has proven to be successful in slowing and containing the spread of COVID-19. In light of this announcement and as we approach the fall season, County Executive Bellone today reiterated the importance of a robust testing and contact tracing program, and encouraged anyone who might have been exposed to the virus to go get tested.

“From day one, we have prioritized access to testing, especially in our hard hit communities, and as we continue on our path to recovery, Suffolk County now has more testing sites than ever before,” said Suffolk County Executive Bellone. “In light of the puzzling CDC guidance released this week, I am proud to stand with Governor Cuomo and others in the medical community to encourage our residents to continue to get tested. If we want to avoid a second wave and keep our infection rate below one percent, testing must be a top priority.”

“A robust testing program allows us to identify as many positive cases as possible, isolate those individuals and quarantine their close contacts, therefore slowing and containing the spread of COVID-19,” said Commissioner of Health Services Dr. Gregson Pigott. “In order to protect public health and help prevent a second wave in the fall, we will continue to recommend everyone who is exposed to the virus gets tested.”

To date, more than 635,000 individuals have been tested for COVID-19 in the County, with more than 7,000 individuals tested yesterday alone. While Suffolk County was once the epicenter of the COVID-19 outbreak, for the eighth day in a row, the County has experienced a positive rate of under one percent. Additionally, earlier this week Suffolk County saw a percent positive rate of 0.4, the lowest percent positive experienced to date.
